The Trust Edition of the Appeal will be printed soon, and your opportunity to contribute to this great success is rapidly passing. This edition will undoubtedly reach 3,000,000 copies, at which figure we shall refuse further contributions and further orders, simply because the capacity of this office, great to print more than 3,000,000 papers. We now have the Appeal building so full of paper that it threatens to collapse; the auxiliary warehouse on the other side of the square is jammed full, and we have rented and have in use every available foot of space in town for paper storage. In addition to that, there are FIVE cars of paper on the road, for which we have no storage—and all of this paper represents 3,000,000 copies in

You can still contribute any sum you desire from ONE DOLLAR up to the fund for sending the Trust Edition to the business men; you can still order extra copies at the late of $1 for 250 or $4 per thousand copies until these full three millions are provided for, after which you cannot get in on it at all This edition is This edition in This edition in This edition is This edition in This edition is This edition in the sent sum of the sent sum o

The Children of the Farm and the Farmer.

HEN Uncle Sam first counted up his children in 1790; he found that about ninety-seven per cent of them lived in the country. By 1900 more than half of them had moved to town, and more were going every day.

Did you ever see a magnet thrust into a plate of iron filings! All the tiny particles leap up into piles around the magnet. East one attracts the one next to it. Even those too distant to touch the magnet directly turn toward it, ready to leap in its direction at the first jar.

Our society is today like that plate of iron filings, with the city playing the part of the magnet. The faces of all are turned toward it. The millions that have gone on before draw their friends after them. Great heaps of human atoms are piled up here and there.

Why Do the Children Leave the Farm?

Why does this great migration go on? What is the magnetic

Why does this great nigration go on? What force that is drawing these multitudes from the farm to the city?

It is not because the city offers a pleasanter place in which to live. Smoke is not to the city of the control of the city of which to live. Smoke is not so refreshing to the lungs as pure air. The crowded tenement and the narrow alley, or the paved street are a poor exchange for the old farm house and the broad, shady highway. To be sure, there are museums, libraries, theaters, lectures, grand halls and beautiful palaces for those who have wealth and leisure. But such things are not vet for those who do the work of the world, either on the farm or in the city.

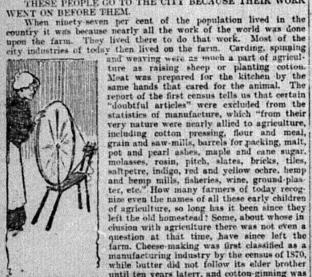

Nevertheless, these great, congested spots on the social body continue to fester and spread, and to ca clusion with agriculture there was not even a question at that time, have since left the farm. Cheese-making was first classified as a manufacturing industry by the census of 1870, while butter did not follow its elder brother until ten years latert, and cotton-ginning was only classified apart from agriculture in 1900.

Agriculture is the great ancestral trunk from which all other industries are descended. It is the parent of all our modern industries, although many of its children have wandered far away. While young and small these children stayed close to their parent. As they grew older and stronger they left the farm and wended their way to the city. The spindle and the loom, the flour mill and cheese press, the dye vat, soap kettle, slaughter-house, and even the churn, have gone to the city, or are on their way there. But however far they have gone, or however great the changes through

They could do nothing else. Their work had gone on before them. Since the world began man has ever been forced to follow whithersoever his work might call him.

Like many a man and woman, these industrial children of agriculture changed greatly in appearance and habits when they took up city life. The plain, simple tools of the farm became strange, complex machines, glittering with paint and polish. Their slow pace was quickened. They were herded together in great prison-like buildings called factories.
They turned night into day and whirled on with feverish speed for a few years. Then they were worn out and thrown upon the scrap-pile to rust away.

Following the tools came the workers.
After these industrial children of agriculture came the farmers boys and girls. They, too, came the farmers' boys and girls. They, too, underwent a great transformation in changing their residence. They, like the machines, are herded in prison-like barracks. They wear shoddy, cat poisonous adulterations and work day and night until worn out and flung aside to die. Worse, still, the machines produce so much and men receive so little for tending them that there are more workers than work. A great host of the children and grandchildren of the farmers are drafted into that most desperate of all armies, the army of the unemployed, whose death rate is far higher than that of any body that ever followed the flag of militarism.

While tool and worker were both changing the state of the change of the chan

While tool and worker were both changing, the relation While tool and worker were both changing, the relation between these two became transformed. On the farm the connection between the tool and the man was simple and direct. The tools belonged to the worker and he kept what he made. The producer owned the means of production and the product. But when the farmer's child reached the city he found that the tool which he had followed now belonged to someone else, and could be used only after the user had agreed to give up to this new owner all the product save a bare living.

Nor is the relation between the farmer and these city-dwelling descendants of the farm less significant. When these industries left for the city they did not lose connection with the farm or the farmer.

Weaving, spinning, grinding, slaughtering, transporting, storing,

Weaving, spinning, grinding, slaughtering, transporting, storing, once but mere babes at the knee of agriculture, now have grown to such giant proportions that they threaten the existence of their parent. Large as they are, and loudly as they swagger, they still consider that they have a "vested right" to "live on the old man."

The Farmer Still Does the Work.

Perhaps we can understand this if we take as an illustration the industry of transportation. When the Declaration of Independence had just been written (and while it was still supposed to mean what it says) the farmers' crops were carried to market in the old lumber wagon, drawn by oxen, mules or horses.

When the farmer of today wishes to send his wheat to the far-off market he finds that the old farm wagon has changed into a long line of fifty-ton pressed steel freight cars, hitched to a great Mogul locomotive, which will move more grain in a minute than the old methods could transport in a year. The farmer's son may still drive the new steed, but, nevertheless, there has been a great change in the social relations of the farmer to his means of transportation.

which they have passed, they are none the less the children of agriculture.

When agriculture itself was thus going piecemeal to town the farmer was compelled to follow.

They could do nothing else. Their work had gone on before whithersoever his work might call him.

Like many a man and woman, these industrial children of agriculture changed greatly in appearance and habits when they took up city life. The plain, simple tools of the farm became strange, was quickened. They were herded together was quickened. They were herded together in great prison-like buildings called factories.

These new something that all the rest of the world must use. It looks as one accomplete men must have matched the team and slaughter-house on their way to town, and, while they were still somewhat green as to city tricks, become passessed of these tools of society. By the time the farmers' sons and daughter-house on their way to town, and, while they were still somewhat green as to city tricks, become passessed of these tools of society. By the time the farmers' sons and daughter-house on their way to town, and, while they were still somewhat green as to city tricks, become passessed of these tools of society. By the time the farmers' sons and daughter-house on their way to town, and, while they were still somewhat green as to city tricks, become passessed of these tools of society. By the time the farmers' sons and daughter-house on their way to town, and, while they were still eligible. At any rate it is now tools the farmers became attending the farmers became along in pursuit of the tools these confidence men had changed the names and altered the appearance of them so that they cannot effectively use that they cannot effectively use that they cannot effectively use what political strength they have. It should be a the farmer so scattered legislation designed to "bust the trusts." But the rest of these as objectively in elements of these confidence men h

they owned, and were called "CAPITALISTS"

These new machines made it possible for the workers to produced with the old simple toois. The workers cannot live unless they can get a chance to use these new tools called "Capital." But the capitalists will not let the workers use these tools unless they agree to give up to the owners, the capitalists, all above the living wage that was produced with the old crude implements back on the farm. Consequently, it was not long until the capitalists began to get possession of everything the rest of the family produced. "They toiled not, neither did they spin," but just held fast to their title to the machines while the farmer and his sons did the work.

Steadily more and more of the wealth of the world came into the hands of the capitalists. During the last few years, there being almost notling that this class did not already own, its members have turned upon each other in a cannibal-like fight, until at the present time less than ten per cent of the population, and this the most idle, useless portion, owns more than half of all the vealth in the country.

What Twenty Men Could Have Done.

What Twenty Men Could Have Done.

We can get some idea of how much the very-biggest of the capitalists have got when we remember that the total wealth of the United States in 1860 was valued at only a little over $16,000,000,000, and that the trusts now own over twenty-five billion dollars' worth of wealth, and that less than twenty men are able to control this whole vast sum. In other words, if a few of our trust magnates (less than could crowd into even an at the beginning of the Civil war, with the same amount of money that they now possess, they could have bought all that lay between the Atlantic and the Pacific, between the Canadian border and the Gulf of Mexico—all the cities, with all the stores and factories, mills, mines and railroads; all the chattel slaves of the South, and the cotton fields in which they

the chattel slaves of the South, and the cotton fields in which they toiled; all the farms, and horses, cattle, sheep and hogs of the North; paid all the expenses of the four years of fighting, and still had enough small change left to purchase a half dozen European nations to take home to their children.

The command of these vast sums of money enabled the capitalists to secure control of the government in all its branches. Then their legislatures made haws, their courts interpreted them, and their mayors, governors and presidents enforced them, saying that all things done by the capitalists were right. Then the newspapers were bought, colleges endowed, churches, libraries and missionary societies given large donations, until "public opinion" gave its approval to this whole state of affairs.

The Man Who Stands Between.

The Man Who Stands Between.

While the farmer or his son owned the old farm wagon and the team, NEITHER FATHER NOR SON OWN THE RAIL. ROADS. Yet the farmer still supplies the load, and the son drives the rig, as they always have done. The OWNERSHIP of the tools has somehow got out of the family, while the WORK still remains.

The Man Who Stands Between.

When the farmer wishes to use the railroad to ship his products to market he is charged "what the traffic will bear," until the fruit for which his children and grandchildren in the city are dying rots into meat, he finds that the Meat Trust, that owns the machines for transporting, slaughtering and preparing the meat, will only pay him enough to barely keep body and soul together, while the work still remains.

At different times in the past the farmer has grown indignant, and organized Alliances, Wheels, Granges, etc., with the purpose of doing terrible things to this class of idle owners. Sometimes the farmers have even captured the offices of a few states, and made laws fixing the amounts to be charged for the use of some of the

At any rate it is now too late for the farmers alone to do anything politically. They are in such a hopeless minority that they can never carry an election. At the present time they make up less than forty per cent of the population, and are so scattered, geographically, that they cannot effectively use what political strength they have. It should begin to dawn upon that portion of the family that has remained at home that alone they are helpless to overthrow their exploiters.

lice shot and clubbed them back into submission. Then they went to the political parties owned by their masters and asked them for better legislation. Sometimes they were laughed at; sometimes the laws were given to them, and then, before their shouts of rejoicing had died away, the supreme court declared the laws unconstitutional. Finally, some of the brightest of the workers began to ask why they should not own the tools with which they worked. They did not see any reason why the great machine that was made and cared for by workers should not be owned by those who made and used it, just as the plain, simple tool from which the machine came had been owned before either tools or men came to town.

They are reaching their hands across the seas to all the sons of

had been owned before either tools or men came to town:

They are reaching their hands across the seas to all the sons of all the farmers, all round the world, to organize a political party, whose object is to change the laws so as to return the ownership of the machines and their products to the makers and the users of those machines. But the wage-workers of the city are also too few to accomplish this task unaided. The capitalists recognize this fact and seek to keep the farmer and his wage-working children fighting among themselves. They tell the wage-worker that the farmer is a member of the capitalist class, and wishes to exploit the workers. They tell the farmer that the laborers want to get his farm away from him. All this unmindful of the fact that the farmer could not exploit the laborer, or the laborer run the farm, if he had a chance.

Don't you think it is about time the family got together polit-

Don't you think it is about time the f..mily got together politically to fight the capitalist who is robbing both? The farmer, fighting the capitalist owner of the instruments by which his crop is transported to market and prepared for use, should join hands with his children, who are fighting with that same capitalist for a chance to use those same tools and get what they produce.

Just because the different processes of industry are scattered all over the country; and just because simple tools have given place to great, complex machines, are no reasons why a class of idle owners should be permitted to live upon the labor of those who made and use the things with which wealth is produced and consumed.

All the processes of production were once a part of agriculture. All the work has always been done by the farmer and his de-

The family is now so scattered, and the processes of produc-tion so divided, and the machinery so complicated, that it is no longer possible to restore all the old conditions of ownership, and let each member of the family own some one individual link in the chain of production.

THE WHOLE PROCESS, WITH ALL THE TOOLS AND RAW MATERIAL, MUST BELONG TO THE WHOLE REUNITED CO-OPERATIVE FAMILY.

This family, as a whole, must own the farm and the factory, the mill and the mine, the railroad, store, slaughter-house and elevator. All will co-operate in doing the work, all will unite in the ownership, all will share in the products.

Whenever the family gets together politically they can accom-plish this. The overwhelming majority which their combined num-bers will give them assures victory. Victory at the polls will enable them to restore the tools and the product to the farmer and his chil-dren. It will unite the industrial and social family.

An economic condition that compels a single child to toil for its daily bread is deplorable. Human sensibility is touched by the thought of children of tender years being coa signed to industrial bondage in a land of plenty. If the sight of a few score children toiling in a factory arouses the humane inpulse and evokes vigorous protest, what shall we say of an army of 1.750.178 juvenile toilers, all compelled to work for a tiving? This is the number of children now working for their daily bread in the United States, according to a special report of the census bureau just issued.—Record-herald.

Now, it is this very ownership by the small producers in their means of production that the economic development of capitalism destroys, and thereby it abolishes the system of small production and the small producers themselves.

The stages by which this development takes place are at first imperceptibe, until the stages of manufactory and finally of the factory itself are reached. In this development machinery plays a gigantic role. #### The Slave Power-1850

"The non-slave holding whites of the South, being not less than seven-tenths of the whole number of the whites, would seem to be entitled to some inquiry into their actual condition, and especially as they have no real political might or consideration in the country, and little opportunity to speak for themselves. I have been a reader for twenty years of Southern newspapers, and a reader and a hearer of congressional debates, but in all that time I do not recollect ever to have seen or heard these non-slave-holding whites referred to by southern gentlemen as constituting any part of what they call the "South." When the rights of the South, or its wrongs, or its policy, or its interests, or its institutions, are spoken of reference is always intended to the rights, wrongs, policy, interests and institutions of the 347,000 slave holders. Nobody gets into congress but by their direction; nobody speaks at Washington for any southern interest but them." -Geo. M. Weston, quoted by Helper in his "Crisis," published in 1850.

The Money Power--- 1905

The non-property-owning class of the United States, being not less than eight-tenths of the whole population, would seem to be entitled to some inquiry into their actual condition, and especially as they have no real political might or consideration in the country, and little opportunity to speak for themselves. I have reader for nearly twenty years of the daily newspapers, and a reader and a hearer of congressional debates, but in all that time I do not recollect even to have seen or heard these non-propertyholding classes referred to by these capitalist congressmen as constituting any part of what they call the "public." When the rights of the "public," or its wrongs, or its policy, or its interests, or its institutions are spoken of, reference is always intended to the rights and wrongs, policy, interests and institutions of the 18,000 people of wealth, listed in the Financial Red Book of the United States. Nobody gets into congress but by their direction; nobody speaks at Washington for any public interest but them. F. D. W.

One great idea stands out amidst the discoveries and improvements of modern times. It is that man is not to exercise arbitrary, irresponsible power over man. To restrain power, to divide and belance it, to create responsibility for its great use, to secure the individual against its abuse, to substitute law for private will, to shield the weak from the strong, to give to the injured the means of redress, to set a fence around every man's property and rights, in a word, to secure liberty-such, under various expressions, is the great object on which philosophers, patriots and philanthropists have long fixed 'their thoughts and hopes.-Channing of the former is that the wages of the propertyless workmen is, in general, controlled by their needs, while in the case of the small property holders, there is no limit downward; it frequently happens that interest on mortgages will absorb the whole product of the labo, of the small holder. In that case he has worked for nothing and paid his own expenses to boot—all this, thanks to his ownership of a little property!

thereby defer the day of their final downfall into the class of the proleta-riat, than actually to hasten the process. Because, let it be remembered, it can only be a question of deferring their final downfall; to reinstate the small producer in his pristine vigor is simply impossible in these days of steam and electricity.

This is a bitter truth to those who are interested in the upholding of the pres-ent social system, because the small farmer and the small city producer are farmer and the small city producer are recognized as the main props of the present system of private ownership in the means of production. For this rea-son the exploiting class is beating about for panaceas to save the small producer. selves.

From the Wall Street Journal.

Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, it can be stated, does not expect any tariff revision by the coming congress. When he does not "expect" such legislation, it can be set down as certain there will be none. He will introduce his bill providing for a maximum and minimum tariff, and probably offer it as an amendment to the bill reducing the tariff on Philippine imports, which is sure to come over from the house. This bill, however, will not revise the tariff. It provides that the present tariff rates shall be the minimum rates, and when any government discriminates in its tariff against American products. 25 per cent of our rates shall be added to the rates against products from such a country. This 25 per cent additional shall represent the maximum rates.

SOME "FIGGERS."

There are 130,000 families (the rich) who own $73,485,000,000 of the national wealth, and, assuming that there are five to a family, and that they consume twice as much tariff and internal revenue-taxed goods as the average family, they would pay $11,700,000 toward sup-porting the government, which lives on such revenue and not taxes, or, in other words, they pay 16 cents per year for each thousand dollars they possess towords, they pay to they possess to-ward sustaining the government which does so much for them.

On the other hand we have $1,000,000

On the other hand we have $1,000,000 people, who possess $5,165,000,000 of wealth, and who pay 723,150,000 yearly through the same means of tariff and revenue, or $88.57 on each thousand dollars which they possess to sustain the government which does so little for them.

Now if the government were supwhich the state, county and school are supported, these 130,000 families of rich people would pay, according to their wealth holdings, and would pay $860,-365,000 a year instead of $11,700,000; while the balance of the people would pay $73,485,000 instead of $723,150,000 a year.

In 1860 the government cost $1.88 cents per capita to operate. Today it costs $9.00 per capita. Do you wonder why this is so, when the rich can shift why this is so, when the rich can shift the burden from their shoulders and property to that of the many? Do you wonder that grafting flourishes when the people quietly vote to pay the bills? When the capitalist can save $630,000,000 a year by this indirect pro-cess of sustaining government, do you wender that they favor subsidies and other grafts which you have to pay? —Percy Daniels, ex-Governor of Kan-sas.

There is talk here of a general shutdown on April 1st next of all the coal mines in the anthracite and bituminous regions of Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Illinois and a part of Kentucky. The object is to crush the United Mine Workers of America, if possibly, and, incidentally, to increase the price of coal. Herman Justi, commissioner for the Illinois coal operators, has called a meeting of all coal operators of the country, to be held at Chicago, November 22d, next. This will be the first time that anthracite and bituminous coal operators will have met together, as their interests have always been remical.

A STRAIGHT TIP.

Comrades of the Appeal Army, I want to call your attention to the advertising columns of the Appeal. In looking over them I find ads that are not z credit to it, but under the present social system, as Bro. Wayland has explained time and again, it cannot very well be helped until the comrades wake up to the fact that they could use these columns to their own material interest, thereby displacing these obnoxious advertisements, which pay the advertisers or they would withdraw their ads.

withch pay the advertisers of they would withdraw their ads.

I will cite one example: Not long ago I was talking to an expert advertising man about the merits of the Appeal as an advertising medium. He said: "The Appeal is the best paying proposition I ever struck. I got more replies and more business from it than any medium. I ever placed my ad in price and amount of space considered." This man was not a Socialist, but what I would call a grafter—namely, Patent Medicine.

Now, comrades, don't you see if these fellows are making big money on their investments in the Appeal columns that it seems reasonable we could run them out with our own advertising of meritor inous goods? I am certain Comrade

I am certain Comrade Wayland will turn these fellows down as soon as their space can be filled with legitimate ads by Socialists who have something to sell that other Socialists want and will buy. Against Public Schools.

The German Catholic Benevolent societies of Arkansas met in Little Rock the other day and passed resolutions denouncing the "free school book" idea, because it was a step in the direction of Socialism. For the same reason they might have condemned the universal suffrage, the public school system, in fact, government itself.

The laborer's prayer, "give us this day our daily bread," should be revised to "give us this day our daily work."

A Farmer's Talk to the Farmers

By CLAYTON J. LAMB

COMBADE CLAYTON J. LAMB.

The first men were hunters. From among these came the herders—the first farmers. Then came the planter. His hands he dug holes in the ground and planted seed.

After many centuries iron was smelted and the firesharpened sticks were provided with iron points, as were the arrows and spears of the hunters. These iron points grew into blades with cutting edges, and rude spades, axes, and hoes were formed. In the process of evolution came these and other one-man tools. From the fire-sharpened stick all tools and machines for tilling the soil have developed.

and working became a separate industry. smith was also a miner and smelter man.

spinning, weaving, knitting, sewing and wood-working had the little ten or fifteen-thousand-dollartheir beginnings on the farm.

In 1782, only one hundred and twenty-three years ago. Watt invented the crank to the steam engine, and very soon talist, votes the control of most of his after that the governor.

Then began the age of machinery. A thousand in- and trust politicians without any disaventors brought forth a thousand machines for doing a thou- greeable kicking, and then goes to the sand kinds of work and hitched them to Watt's engine. Then trust market, as he must, and gets one man could do the work of many. The processes of wealth skinned. production were thus revolutionized. Old feudal institutions. The in gave way and then began the era of Capitalism.

Now, Brother Farmer, I want to call your attention to one basic fact in connection with the evolution of the means that is his interest as a workingman? Let us see. of production. It is this:

BEFORE MACHINERY CAME PRODUCTION (OF FOOD, CLOTHING, ETC.) WAS AN INDIVIDUAL AFTER MACHINERY CAME PRODUCTION BECAME A SOCIAL ACT.

. It required one man to sharpen a stick in the fire and only one man could use it after the rude tool was made. So with the other hand tools which followed. They were adapted only to individual use. There was no opportunity had been a successful business man and for co-operation in the use of hand or one-man tools or in the distribution of their limited output.

One man, with only a little help from the blacksmith could make a wooden carti a yoke, and thongs of raw-hide. Alone he could break his oxen and haul goods. But it takes thousands of men to run a railroad. One man could make a fiail and thresh grain, but it takes thousands to make a threshing machine. One man could gather bark, build his vat and beam, tan a calf's skin, spin his thread from flax grown and backled by himself, whittle his pegs from wood, shape a last and make a pair of shoes. That was individualism in production.

But, now that machinery has come, things are done differently. Thousands of farmers produce cattle, other thousands of workers haul them to vost sloughter how thousands of other men produce the hides. Other thousands spin thread and turn speols; other thousands make all kinds of tools and machinery from iron which is mined by other thousands using coal mined by still other thousands. More thousands fell trees and saw lumber, which other thousands work into buildings, and while these thousands are doing these things thousands of farmers are feeding them all, and all these tens of thousands of farmers, railroad men, lumber men, carpenters, brick-makers, tanners, machinists, spinners and masons, and the others, are co-operating in the produc-tion of each pair of shoes. This is Social Production.

Thus machinery has made us dependent upon each other. We are not independent; no man is. We are interdependent-made so by the mode of production by machinery-and the terms of this inter-dependence must be arranged.

There are several sorts of farmers, but, arranging them according to the source of their incomes, there are four gen-

1. Capitalist Farmers-Usually bankers or business men of the towns, who, because of ownership, are enabled their dirty work for two dollars per and free beer. These to lerv a fax, which is otherwise called rent, upon those who are the fellows who control the organizations of both old do the work-landlords pure and simple.

2. Working Farmers-Who are also small capitalists; them against the useful citizenship. those who till the land they own; those who are working about fourteen hours a day while their bired men kick if called upon to put in more than ten or eleven hours; those who are struggling fiercely to keep out of the renter or wageworking class, towards which they are rapidly drifting, as shown by United States census statistics herein quoted.

THE RENTERS-Those who own their own teams who farm land they do not own, paying cash or share rent. Usually these, and also those who actually farm their own land, think they are their "own bosses," but the shrewd capitalists know better. no machines. They have nothing to sell but their labor. They work for so much per day, month or year. They are proletarians. Generally they work shorter hours and have more leisure and less worry than their employers.

The first sort are not farmers at all. They are landlords. By farmers, I mean those who work their own or rented farms; not landlords or wage-workers:

The farmer's income is derived from three sources: from his capital, from his own labor and that of his family. and from whatever profit he can make by employing wage-workers. This last item on the whole is very small, because cially useless by serving socially useless people. as a rule all he can make is passed up to the trusts in the

The business man is apt to view it from the business ries and dissipations. These people stand between the far-standpoint; scientists go at it with logic, philosophy and other scientists go at it with logic, philosophy and other scientific tests; artists see the art side; wage-workers and these tolls and taxes they call rent, interest and profit. For, Brother Farmer, we should remember that our real of view; preachers from the religious or ethical side. I am market is the millions who work in mines, forests and fac-

The farmer also receives an income from his capital. entire farming outfit was a simple strong stick, which, for want of knife or ax, he sharpened to a point by burning in upon the value of his investment. Indeed, Brother Faration—among business men. The use of machinery combiness men. The use of machinery combiness men. The use of machinery combiness men, it is plain that if farms would afford more than pelled, and still compels, business organization. On the side mer, it is plain that if farms would afford more than pelled, and still compels, business organization. On the side the usual net rate of interest they would soon go the way of the mines, forests, railroads and factories—that is, they company or corporation, followed by the combination of corwould be sought for by capitalists as an investment. As it is at present the capitalist class (by which I mean the unions of men in shops, then the organization by entire real capitalist and not the little $5,000 or $10,000 imitation of tions) can make more by letting the farmers think they all wage-workers into federations covering the entire country own the farms and then skinning them when they go to So now we unorganized farmers see capital organized with the markets. So long as the capitalists can control the means as much as the wealth of entire states under one control From the farm came the blacksmith, and from smelting working became a separate industry. The first blacks the was also a miner and smelter man.

So, too, the other now great industries, such as tanning weaving, knitting, sewing and wood-working had the farms and the markets in which the farmers minst and wage-labor with the voting strength of entire states in buy and sell they have a better thing than they would have one solid organization, and these two great social forces by owning the farms and running them with hired labor. In fact, Brother Farmer, there is no man so profitable. What does all this mean?

Brother Farmer, it means that so-farmer who manages well, produces much, imagines he is the real thing capiown business into the hands of the trusts.

The interest of the $10,000 farmer as a capitalist is about $400 per year. But

When I first read in the good old Appeal, many years ago, that under Socialism the yearly income of the average workingman (farmer included) would be the equivalent of not less than four thous sand dollars per year my first thought was that Editor Wayland had set the fig-ures too high. Many Socialists accused him of exaggeration. But I knew that he

Lat exaggeration would surely injure him. Besides, I had labor under the guise of rent, interest and profit. This is tested other of his "large" statements and found them cor- the CLASS STRUGGLE. Here's another big job for us ect. The proper thing to do was to investigate before de-| farmers. If it is not "up to us" now it soon will be. iding. I have done this, and am very glad to testify my belief that Comrade Wayland was right.

Actually we do not live very much better than our grandfathers' fathers did, though we produce twenty or forty imes as much. Of the vast increase in wealth produced the farmers and wage-workers get very little. We know that. Then where does it go? Who does get it?

There are two kinds of people—those who are socially useful and those who are socially usefess. The former are those who render useful social service by providing food, clothing, shelter, fuel, transportation, education, communication, etc. The socially useless class comprise those who render no useful social service, and these are far more numerous than is generally supposed. There are millions of them, all fed and clothed largely at the expense of the farmer, and altogether supported by labor.

 The army and navy—Used by the capitalist class for purposes of conquest and to keep labor subject to capital. 2. The police-Who see to the preservation of order while capitalism gets in its work.

3. Lawyers and courts-Who juggle with the preceleudalism and chattel siavery, applying them to the settlement of issues between labor and capital in these days of semi-Socialism, uniformly deciding against labor even to the extent of declaring the constitution itself unconstitutional.

Politicians-All grades, from Bosses Belmont and Aldrich, Depew and Clark, Francis and Butler-a savory bunch of grafters-down to the burn ward heeler who does parties absolutely and use the powers of government through

5. Advertising-An immense army of agents, printers. paper-makers engaged in diverting trade from one person or firm to another, rendering a personal and not a social

6. Makers and venders of shoddy and adulterated goods -Certainly it cannot be claimed that cheats and swindlers respectable business men.

7. Gamblers—Including board of trade men, speculatalists know better.
4. FARM LABORERS—These have no land, no teams, insurance (fire and life), and their clerks and assistants.

8. Lackeys-Those engaged in personal service. 9. Landlords, pawn-brokers, collectors, installment salesnen, and other "held-up" men.

10. Three-fourths of the merchants and salesmen working miserably in the miles of little, nasty, individualist stores and saloons, a survival of the days of hand pro-

This list could be greatly enlarged; to it can be added

Thus a large part of labor's product is wasted and much form of rent, interest or profit. And that is what makes of it worse than wasted. And, Brother Farmer, these socially the shrewd capitalist smile. It means for him summers at useless people wear better clothes and live much more ex- thing, but nothwithstanding this high resolve, the Alliance tistics show what class "saves" it. It piles up in the hands of those who "own" the means of transportation and who control the market-that is to say, the trusts. Trace the wealth created by the socially useful class and nine times of view; preachers from the religious or ethical side. I am distribution a farmer, and, naturally, have considered the questions which a farmer, and, naturally, have considered the questions which men who come between all these workers, collecting toll and comprise the socially useless class. Brother Farmer, is it not quite silly for us to sanction that sort of an arrangement with our ballots?

Brother Farmer, it means that so-ciety is trying to adjust itself to the new mode of production by machinery. And nothing is more certain than that the struggle between these classes must continue until these adjustments are made

And squarely between these two organ ized forces stands the farmer, almost wholly unorganized. What is sure to happen to the farmer under these circumstances?

Production by machinery has already half socialized society, and this class struggle cannot end till evolution has completed its work in that respect. Not until society is fully socialized in harmony with the mode of production can peace come. Labor must some time win this struggle or go back to the feudalism and chattel slavery from which it has only recently emerged.

A class of mere owners of the half socialized means of production seeks to continue to levy tolls and taxes upon

Brother Farmer, the day of the small individual capitalist is past. The only thing we can do is to organize the socially useful citizenship into the great Social Trust, eliminate the socially useless class and place society on a social ervice-that is to say, an honest labor-base and there we are again!

When the trusts came that which was profit became in fact a tax. The trusts are exercising the governmental power of taxation. They are asking us farmers what we are going to do about it and they are going to force us to answer the ODe we can answer, and that is election day at the polls!

Farmers have been told so often that they "can't organize" that most of them actually believe it. We see nearly all other occupations organized-doctors, lawyers, grain and hay buyers, grist-mills, steel, copper, lead, iron, oil, sugar, packing-houses, tanneries-in fact, the whole caboodle of them organized and "grafting," on farmers largely, and we have a pretty fair idea they are getting the best of us gentle agriculturists on every deal. And we feel pretty sure that the only way we can keep even is by farmers' organizations. But so far, though farmers have made several excellent spurts towards organization, they have not yet succeeded as they would wish; nevertheless they have done well, though not yet as well as they can and will do.

When the panic of 1873-9 came, the Grange, which had been struggling for some years, suddenly spread over most of the country. The farmers met in their country school houses and gravely deliberated; hard times were upon them and tools (quite generally subject to chattel mortgages) and are rendering useful social service. This army, No. 6, is and they were being squeezed. Politics was rotten and a whopper. It includes some hundreds of thousands of very they knew it, so they resolved with due solemnity that the Grange would have nothing to do with politics-strictly nothing. "No politics in the Grange," said they, "not a bit of it." Nevertheless the Grange did go into politics. They took to politics somewhat as a bullfrog takes to water. It was a plunge-kerchug! and the farmers were in the "swim." They captured whole state legislatures—a good string of them-and went to make laws for the farmers, and even to changing state constitutions. They did it so quickly that their opponents were surprised, but not more so than the farmers themselves. When the hard times passed the farmers resumed their old way, and so did the corporations. This was only about thirty years ago.

Then in 1889 another panic set in, increasing till 1894, and the Farmers' Alliance sprang up almost in a day. But they, too, were firmly resolved that politics should be kept out of the Alliance and the Alliance should be kept out of politics. They would have nothing to do with the unclean Newport, yachts, private cars, dog funerals at $1,000 per pensively than the working farmer. They are supported threw itself solidly into politics—their only way out then people.

Brother Farmer: Let me tell you that Socialism is a dog, trips to Europe, political preferment, servants galore by the workers far better than the workers support themsubject that each person approaches and considers from his own standpoint and in the light of his own material interests. We see it differently according to the spectacles through which we look.

The business man is apt to view it from the business man is apt to view it from the business man is apt to view it from the business ries and dissipations. These people stand between the far
The business man is apt to view it from the business of the useful class, and as a man upon the political field, and they proceeded to do a man upon the political field, and they proceeded to do a man upon the political field, and they proceeded to do a man upon the gentle of things. They captured state legislatures; they elected consumption from taxation, notices in "Fads and Fancies" and numerous other privileges, luxurer, do you vote for that?

Nevertheless vast wealth is "saved." The census standard in interest and levy tolls and taxes on industry distinct them the workers far better than the workers far better vided in interest. They were part capitalist and part workingmen. They abandoned their public warehouse proposition. Politicians crept in and steered the movement in the interest of the capitalist element. The great panic lulled, the politicians set up a song of the prosperity which they, and not the socially useful people, had brought about, and the Alliance was sung to its last, long sleep.

These were two great movements and they prove several things: 1. That the farmers can organize when they set themselves about it. 2. That so far they have only set themselves about it when they were pinched beyond endu-rance. 3. That farmers take to the political form of organization like a duck takes to water. 4. That the farmers, politically organized, are a great social force. 5. That unorganized farmers are as clay in the politicians' hands.

But why did the Grange and Alliance movements fail? They were organized to protect their interests as farmers -that is, as both workingman and as small capitalists. Here were two horses going in exactly opposite directions ind they could not ride both—not very far—and they didn't. They could not protect their interests as capitalists and as workingmen at the same time, and they never can. Neither an they organize as capitalists-they are financially too inconsequential. It is as workingmen that farmers loom large, and it is only upon the strictly labor side that any effective organization, economic or political, is possible for them. On his side they can strike hands with the immense army of vage-workers. It is in the power of farmers to organize the iseful citizenship into a political party that can sweep this nation clean of social uselessness, but not as small capitalsts. Honest Labor has no more use for small parasites than t has for large ones. That is why the Grange and Alliance novements failed.

Brother Farmer, I am here to tell you that small capialism is essentially an individualist institution. It cannot command the use of the best machinery at all. It cannot use even its own poor, little machinery to the best advantage. It cannot avail itself of the best business methods. It cannot "produce the goods" and it is too weak to get its puny product to a decent market after it has produced it with wo to ten times the necessary labor. My dear brother, please do catch on to this thought: The age of small capitalism passed when big machinery came.

Modern modes of production are competing the small farmer out of existence. We see this process going on all ground us. The United States census reports show it plainly. See page 218, Abstract of 12th Census, 1900. Here are the official figures:

YEAR	Percentage of Farms Operated by Owners	Percentage of Farms
1890 1900	74.5 per cent 71.6 per cent	25.5 per cent 28.4 per cent 35.3 per cent

But a very large proportion of the farms reported as being "operated by owners" are mortgaged—about one-third of them, as shown on page 94 of the same report:

Tenant farmers	35.3
Mortgaged farm homes	90
Per cent of farm families having homes	free from mortgage 44.4

Brother Farmer, this shows that only four-ninths of the farmers of the United States own their farms free, while five-ninths of them are practically reniers.

So much for the farmer. Now, let us see how it is with the people generally. On page 91, same census report,

8	Total number of families in the United States, 1900	16 990 707
ğ	Families living in rented homes Families whose home are mortgaged	8.395.599

So it appears that much less than one-third of families of the United States own their homes. Brother Farmers, is that what you are voting for?

Farmers lived, and lived well, in the days of the oneman tools, when the products of labor were not one-twentieth of what they are now. Labor now produces twenty times as much as it did only sixty or seventy years ago, and thirty times as much as it did one hundred years ago. (See Report Commissioner of Labor, U. S., 1898, Hand and Machine Labor, pages 24 to 70.) Labor lived then as it lives now. apon the least portion of its product that it will consent to live on. Under the capitalist system the wages of labor do not depend upon the amount of its product, but upon the cost of its living at the lowest standard to which it can be forced. And the reward which the farmer receives for his labor is governed by this same iron law of wages.

Mining, manufacturing and transportation have passed under the control of the trusts; agriculture comes next. Al. eady big farms using big machinery are found by scores and hundreds, and the little would-be individualist farmer with his little old two-horse plow is trying to compete with the steam plow with which one man does the work of twenty. The result is certain-the little two-horse farmer will go the way of the village shoemaker, the one-man tannery and the old spinning wheel. Those who own the big machines will own the land. The little farm owners are rapidly becoming wage-workers. Those who own the means of production are in position to dictate the terms upon which the socially useful people shall work. The trusts cannot be destroyed; they are organizing the industries of the world. I am trying to tell you that machinery compels social organization. We cannot go back to fire-sharpened sticks or oneman tools. What we need is not less organization, but more. The power exercised by the trusts is a taxing power -a function of government. And what is the femedy? I can think of no means of escape except that proposed by

The Social (collective) ownership of the socially used means of production in the interest of the socially useful
